ABSTRACT

This bibliography identifies a useful selection of basic documents and publications to provide help and guidance to schools of library and information science and archival studies--especially those in developing countries--that wish to establish a basic collection for the use of students and teachers or to enlarge their existing collection. Because of the rapid changes which are occurring in the information field, the guide concentrates on materials published during the last 10 years although some older items have been included. The 894 entries in English, French, and Spanish are arranged in 18 broad subject fields. All current periodical titles are grouped together, irrespective of subject. An alphabetical author index is provided, as well as the names and addresses of all publishers represented in the guide. The majority of Unesco publications which fall within the scope of the guide have been included in the main sequence, as have a number of Unesco documents particularly concerned with education and training for information work. A wider selection of Unesco documents is listed in the appendix. (DMC)

PREFACE

The present Guide, prepared under contract for Unesco by J. Stephen Parker FLA, LDC International Ltd, United Kingdom, is to provide help and guidance to schools of library and information science and archival studies, especially in the developing countries, wishing to establish a basic collection for the use of students and teachers or to enlarge their existing collection.

The Ad Hoc Committee on Education and Training Policy and Programme, which advises the General Information Programme of Unesco on its activities in relation to the education and training of information specialists and users, has for some time been concerned about the inadequacy of collections of professional literature in library schools, particularly in those of the developing countries. Two studies on the needs for textbooks and other teaching materials had been undertaken for Unesco in 1978 and 1980 and confirmed the urgent need for a tool to aid in establishing basic collections of such materials.

In 1982 the General Information Programme commissioned the production of the present Guide. It was prepared with the collaboration of the members of the Ad Hoc Committee on Education and Training and a number of specialists from different regions who have reviewed the preliminary version and offered valuable suggestions for changes and additions.

Further suggestions for improvement of this Guide, especially for material in French and Spanish, are most welcome and should be addressed to :

INTRODUCTION

This document is not intended as a bibliography of any aspect of library, archive or information science, nor as a guide to the complete contents of an ideal library school collection. It attempts, however, to identify a useful selection of basic documents suitable for use in teaching these subjects, particularly in developing countries, and is intended for use in building up a library collection in this field.

In view of the rapid changes which are taking place in the information field, it was thought advisable to concentrate on materials published during the last ten years. Some older items have been included, mainly in response to specific suggestions from those to whom the revised draft was circulated in 1983, but the work makes no attempt to include even a representative selection of the "classics" of library and information science literature. The majority of Unesco publications which fall within the scope of the guide have been included in the main sequence, as have a number of Unesco documents particularly concerned with education and training for information work. A wider selection of Unesco documents, particularly those issued by the General Information Programme, is provided in the Appendix.

The following types of material have been excluded from the guide, irrespective of their date of publication :

(a) periodical articles and individual contributions to conference proceedings and other collective works
(b) collected conference proceedings, seminar papers, etc. unless containing several papers of particular relevance to developing countries
(c) directories
(d) general descriptions of individual libraries or of the library situation in particular localities
(e) highly specialised reports, unless likely to be of general interest
(g) dictionaries and glossaries which were published before 1978.

The criteria used to determine which items should be included in the guide are less easy to describe. Ideally, such criteria should have been as objective as possible, being based on the recommendations of practising teachers of library, archives and information science from developing countries or on lists of the works already being used by students in individual library schools. As a matter of fact, the criteria for the inclusion of items remain essentially subjective.

The compiler is well aware of the limitations of a subjective approach to identifying a "core collection" of teaching materials and it is hoped that those who have an opportunity to consult the guide and thus to become aware themselves of its shortcomings, will communicate their criticism and, in particular, their suggestions as to the deletion of existing titles and the inclusion of new ones, to the Division of the General Information Programme of Unesco for possible use in a more complete edition. Suggestions for additional materials in French and Spanish would be particularly welcome.

Entries have been arranged in a small number of broad subject fields. All current periodical titles are grouped together, irrespective of subject. There is no subject index as such, but the Table of Contents provides an indication of the topics covered by each field. An alphabetical author index is provided, principally as an aid to checking the guide against existing library collections. The names and addresses of all publishers represented in the guide are listed on pages 123 to 239 inclusive.

Individual entries for monographs are arranged in accordance with ISO 690 and give, where possible, the names of the first and, where applicable, the second author(s), title, edition, place of publication, publisher, date of publication, pagination, other bibliographical details, series title (if any), price and ISBN. The prices quoted should be regarded as approximate ; many have been increased since their inclusion in the guide. Entries for current periodicals are also arranged in accordance with ISO 690 and give, where possible, the title of the periodical, frequency, place of publication, publisher, date of first issue and ISSN. Considerable effort has been made to obtain full details in respect of all items, but in many cases this has not been possible.
